When old Squire Crane was first elevated to the dignity of Justice of the Peace, in Southwestern Missouri, he knew less of law and legal forms than he did about killing "bars." It was my fortune to be a witness of the first marriage ceremony the old fellow ever undertook to perform. The young couple stood up in the Squire's office, and the happy bridegroom desired the functionary to " propel," to which impatient request he acceded, by inquiring:

"Miss Susan Roots, do you love that ar

"Nothing shorter," responded Miss Roots, in a subdued laugh.

"And you, John Kenan, do you allow for to take Sue for better and worse ?"

"Sartin as shootin', Squire," earnestly responded the enamored John, chucking Sue under the chin.

"Then you both individually and collectively now promise to love, honor and obey each other without end?"

Bought and sold, for'so much gold! Well, the contract has been past; As other values have been told.

We've learned thine own at last. Dollars and cents, and lands and renta Were in one halance laid, And all thy manhood's proud intents Have been at last outweighed.

Bought and sold, for so much gold! Yet all is open, fair; And thou hast scorned, though heed and sold, A vain disguise to wear;

The earnest love of truth, Which made so gloriously bright The promise of thy youth.

Hast sold thy love, hast sold thy smile, Hast sold thy very self,

Hast boldly bartered honor, right,

And rivited, for fortune's wile, Thy soul to golden pelf? Be honest, now the bargain's made,

And cease all idle dreaming ; If thou can st not learn to give, Give thou its outward seeming.

Be brave, and act the living lie Thy shameless lips have breathed. And wear, without a single sigh, The thoras thy hands bath wreathed;

Brush back the instincts of thy heart, And look upon the real, For thou hast made all human faith A shadowless ideal.
